NEXT GENERATION

FULL FIBRE BROADBAND

Coming to your street!

Grain Communications are working with third party contractors to build a future-proof fibre-optic network!

What is Full Fibre?

A Full Fibre broadband network (like this one) is made up of entirely fibre-optic cable – giving you access to the speeds and reliability homes need today! Our network is built with the future in mind, delivering a dedicated fibre cable to every home for a true Full Fibre connection.

How is this different?

Most UK homes are still connected to the old-fashioned internet network, designed for telephones. This means copper lines are used for part of your connection, drastically slowing down your broadband speeds and sharing them with your neighbours.

This service is often sold as 'fibre' or 'fibre-optic broadband', when only providing a partially fibre connection (aka FTTC). Don't be fooled!

Who is doing the work?

Grain Communications Ltd will soon start working with third party contractors on the pavements and roads, to bring the Full Fibre broadband network to your area on a street-by-street basis.

The contractors will erect safety barriers and signage in the area, reinstate as they go and ensure all statutory requirements are met.

They aim to carry out the works with as little disruption as possible and will ensure regular site visits and inspections are carried out.

We apologise on their behalf for any disruption over the next few weeks, as they complete the work that will allow Grain to bring Full Fibre broadband directly to you at market leading prices!
